

GUAM ELOPERS PINCHED AT YAP, WED IN YOKOHAMA

Fair Hawaiian Moon Blamed for Marines Deserting With Dusky Beauties.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Naval authorities here to-day were considering the romantic case of Corp. William V. Dawson, twenty-two, of Walnut, Ala., and Sergt. Everett E. Clifton, twenty-five, of Winona, Minn., stationed in the Marine Corps on the Island of Guam.

Official records of the case showed that life in Guam had begun to pall on Dawson and Clifton when they met the two native girls—chamorroes they are called—with sadder colored complexions and 1918 hula hula gowns.

A motor boat stocked with provisions was commandeered and the four eloped. The first landing and nearest one was the Island of Yap, now getting internationally famous. Gasoline was low and the motor boat put in there. While the bellows of the island crowded about to inspect the visitors the Japanese who run Yap seized the "four some" for observation.

The Japanese sent Dawson and Clifton along with the two causes of the trouble to Yokohama. At that port they were turned over to the American Consul.

The Consul told it to the marines. It was a double wedding, two marines and two chamorroes. All that happened last summer. The honeymoon, with the bridegrooms under arrest, ended when American authorities returned the marines to Guam last September. To-day, with the brides in their new thatched roof apartment, not worrying about high rents, the marines are awaiting trial for desertion. Marine officials say the case is "without precedent" and blame the fair Hawaiian moon. Dawson enlisted at Portland, Ore., in 1916. Clifton joined at Seattle the same year.
